RESEARCH PROJECTS

Risk or problem: regulating rights in global value chains, 2020 to present

The Graduate Institute, Geneva (IHEID)

Research on the role of risk-based and problem-centred approaches in cooperation, competition, and regulation involving "human rights risks" and stakeholders in market transactions. By reframing rights challenges as risks facing global value chains, the research aims to bridge the gap between state and business duties articulated in the UN Guiding Principles, OECD Guidelines, and other global soft law business codes.

Transnational governance for human rights and social justice in a pluralistic world, 2018 to date

Fulbright Canada Program; Max Planck Institute for Comparative Public & International Law

Exploration of the State's role in regulatory cooperation with private business and civil society actors to govern risks to human rights and social justice in global value chains; analysis of the potential to incorporate international norms through inclusive dialogue-based transnational governance systems. Article and workshop.

Contextualizing Social Justice in International and Transnational Law

U. Windsor Law, Canadian Council on International Law (CCIL), British Institute of International Law

Analysis of social justice as a meta-principle of international law as a means to adjust bias in specialized rules of labour, trade, finance, investment, development and refugee law. Based on Call for Papers, I led a Research Workshop and CCIL conference panel, Social justice in international law: Building coherent solutions.
